24. Test #6. S. America, Interior Amazonia. The Iawa are a small non-centralized, non-stratified, semi-nomadic, non-solidary, complementary fishing-gardening tribe. This is a song of fishing magic. Mixed group. (Flornoy, A 3)
25. Test #7. Africa, Nilotes. The Luo are cattle herders and agriculturalists living in small villages in Kenya. The singer likens the chief to a rock in the lake which stops the fish from passing (and thus feeds the people). Male solo with mixed group, stamping with legbells. (Tracey #2 (TR-167), B 7)
26. Test #8. Polynesia. Cook Islanders live by horticulture and ocean fishing. Their groupy, somewhat stratified, complementary culture is reflected in the highly integrated performances of choreographed song dances in forceful, wide-voiced style. Male group and female group. (Beckett)
27. Test #9. The Balkans, Montenegro. This is a culture of mountain herders and small farmers, living on the edge of an empire - a stratified, though solidary and complementary society. In this dance song the village girls challenge the lads to seize them. Male group and female group. (Kennedy #1, A 22)
28. Test #10. Europe, Spain, Castile. The individualistic monogamous, wheat farmers and shepherds of Spain created more ballads than any other people in Europe. This is a somewhat embellished rendition of an old romance (ballad) about the daughter of the emperor of Rome. Male and female solos. (Lomax #25, B9)
29. Test #11. S. Asia, India, Benares. A Hindi religious folk song about Krishna and his love for the lovely milkmaid, Radha, in the energetic style of the Indian male village chorus. (Danielou #2, A 2)
30. Test #12. S. Africa. A Shona boy singing to his mbira (hand-held ideophone of tuned iron strips, thumb plucked). His herding-cultivator people belong to a nation of over a million. (Tracey #1, A 13)
31. Test #13. S. Europe, N. Sardinia. The mountain shepherds in some hilly areas preserve many traces of antique culture, including this unique polyphonic, brass-voiced singing style. Male solo with male group. (Lomax and Carpitella #29, B 37)
32. Test #14. Africa, Equatorial Bantu. The Topoke are a modestly centralized, complementary tribe of jungle gardeners of the North Congo Basin. Here Topoke women perform their traditional duty of mourning the dead, each wailing on her own. Female group. (Camps, B 3)
33. Test #15. Central Europe, N.E. Italy. Friuli. Here on the green slopes of the Italian Alps one finds a choral tradition like those of Tyrol and Austria and handling as a native folk product the melodic and harmonic style that gave rise to the mainstream of European classical music. This is a group of villagers, improvising one of a string of brief melodies called villanelli. (Lomax and Carpitella, field record)
